NONPROFIT
MANAGEMENT

Facing the threat of privatization and for-profit competition, nonprofit organizations are challenged to find frontiers and leaders who not only possess keen business and managerial skills, but can also effectively influence change at a community or social level. Also, the nonprofit sector requires leaders and managers who are creative, skilled, and strategic in creating and maintaining organizations that successfully address their missions and institutional objectives.

Whatever your background, you can gain the critical skills needed to lead diverse and complex nonprofit organizations. This “Master of Science in Nonprofit Management” degree program allows you to study and learn about scholar-practitioners who share their academic and professional experiences to help you quickly apply what you learn from our recommended study materials.

With your “Master of Science in Nonprofit Management”, you will study the interrelationship of the sectors in the society from an historical, economic, theoretical, political and other perspective to better-know how nonprofits contribute to local, national and global society.
